Frederic Chopin was one of the greatest composers of music for the piano. He was born in a town just outside of Warsaw, Poland. His mother introduced him to the piano, giving him lessons at a very early age. Chopin played extremely well and gave his first concert at the age of eight. He also enjoyed writing music; by the time he was seven, he had composed two polonaises.

Chopin’s music included traditional piano pieces of his time such as concertos, sonatas, waltzes and preludes. However, he also introduced some non-traditional forms that included the étude, nocturne and ballade as well as the mazurka and polonaise, which are dances from Poland that feature rich, energetic rhythms and harmonies. The polonaise was one of Chopin’s favorites, and the Military Polonaise, written in 1838, is one of his most famous works in this genre. Technically, a polonaise is not a dance but rather a promenade or procession that was often played as couples entered a ballroom.

Unlike many child prodigies, Chopin grew in popularity throughout his career as a pianist, teacher and composer. Although his early fame came while he was in Poland as a youth, he began to travel in Europe after graduating from high school and eventually settled permanently in Paris.

Chopin never returned to his native land, but he also never forgot it. He was never healthy, and was only 39 when he died of tuberculosis. When he was buried in France, a special box of earth was brought from Poland to sprinkle on his grave.

The polonaise is a stately Polish dance in 3/4 time, originally performed for court processions and ceremonies. It was often used as a processional for military men or military couples upon entering a ballroom. This was one of Chopin’s favorite musical forms. He wrote his first polonaise when he was 7 years old and continued to write polonaises throughout his life. The Military Polonaise was composed in October 1838 and published in December 1840.
